Understanding OCD: Breaking the Obsession-Compulsion Cycle

An 8-lesson evidence-based course on the most misunderstood — and most treatable — anxiety disorder

The Truth About OCD

OCD is not about being neat or organized. Real OCD is a serious condition that can consume hours of a person's day and cause tremendous suffering.

It's sometimes called "The Doubt Disease" because it targets the things you value most — your safety, your loved ones, your morality — and floods you with unbearable uncertainty.

> OCD is one of the most debilitating anxiety disorders, yet also one of the most treatable when approached correctly.

Not a Personality Quirk

OCD is not a preference for tidiness — it is a clinical disorder with measurable neurological patterns.

Targets What You Love

Obsessions latch onto your deepest values, making the intrusive thoughts feel especially threatening and real.

Hours Lost Daily

Severe OCD can consume 3–8 hours per day in rituals, avoidance, and mental compulsions.

What You'll Learn

This course covers everything you need to understand OCD deeply and take meaningful steps toward recovery.

1

What OCD Actually Is

How OCD differs from normal worry and everyday intrusive thoughts.

2

Common OCD Themes

Contamination, harm, symmetry, taboo thoughts, and more.

3

The OCD Cycle

Trigger → obsession → distress → compulsion → temporary relief.

4

Why Compulsions Backfire

How rituals strengthen OCD over time instead of resolving it.

5

ERP Treatment

Exposure and Response Prevention — the gold-standard, evidence-based approach.

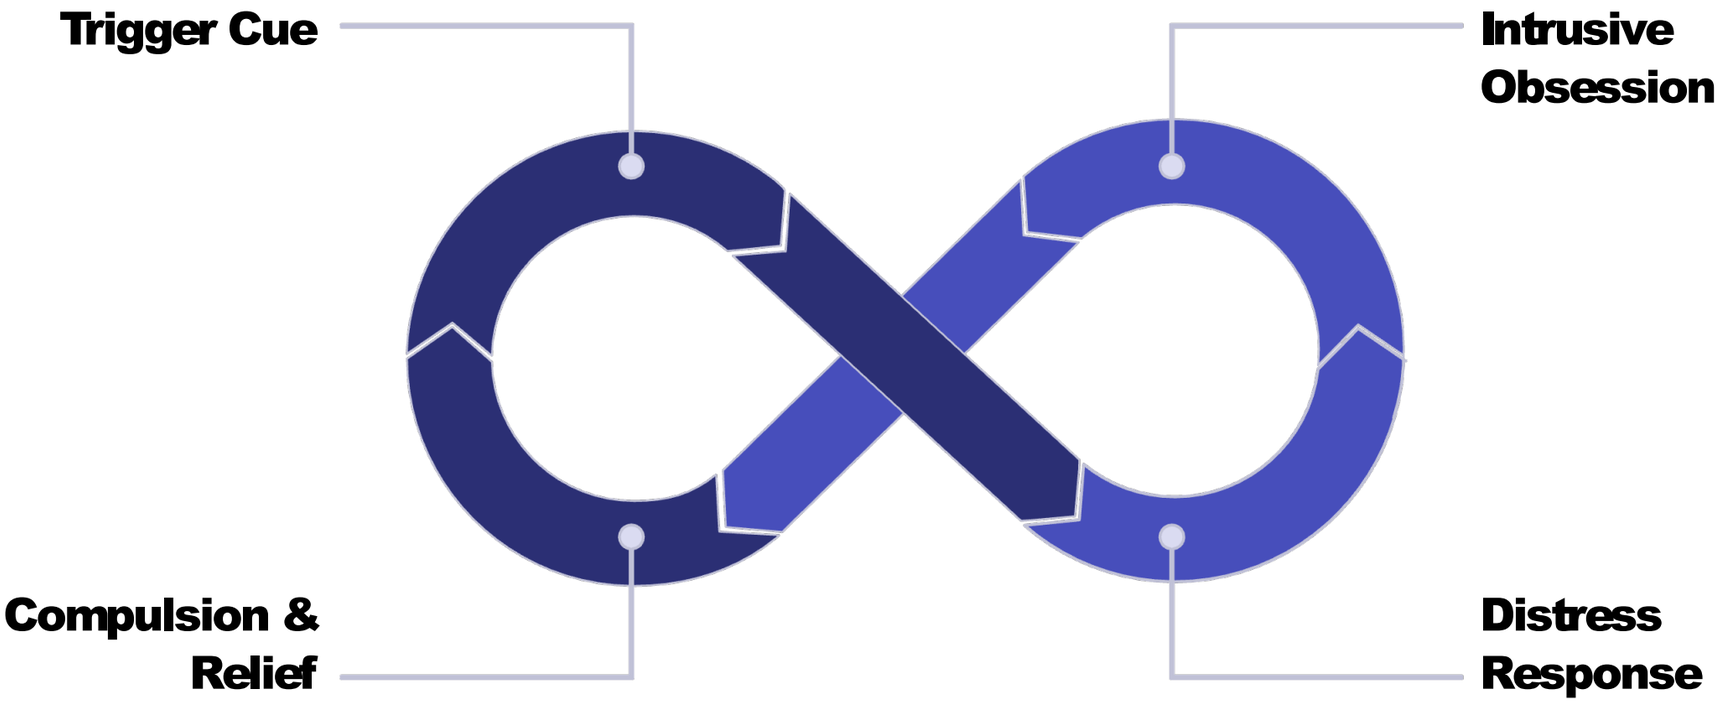
6

Finding a Specialist

How to locate an OCD-trained therapist and what to expect in treatment.

The OCD Cycle

Every compulsion teaches your brain the obsession was a real threat — making the next cycle stronger and harder to break.



The Trap

Relief feels like a solution — but it is actually the engine that keeps OCD running.

The Way Out

Breaking the cycle means tolerating distress without performing the compulsion — the core of ERP.

The Core Message

> "You are not your thoughts."

Intrusive thoughts are normal — everyone has them. The difference with OCD is not the content of the thought, but the meaning attached to it and the compulsive response it triggers.

This course will help you understand that distinction and prepare you for the most effective treatment available.

Thoughts ≠ Reality

Having a thought does not make it true, dangerous, or a reflection of who you are.

Meaning Is the Key

OCD hijacks the meaning you assign to thoughts — therapy helps you reassign that meaning.
